Published by Knopf.
£28.00. US$32.00. ISBN 978-0-374-76950-7.
Folio. 229 pages. In an archaic and enticing style of writing, the narrator of La Belle Sauvage, Ismael de las Nieves, narrates a tale of two halves, one set in the Old West, where the two main characters, Daniel and Chloe, take part in an unfolding mystery that involves a man of letters called Elijah Czorn. In the end, the text consists of a kind of labyrinthine double story, told from two different sides and through two different sets of characters: one narrated by Ismael, the other by an unnamed narrator. The Bluest Eye By Toni Morrison New York : Knopf, 2010.

Finally, Toni Morrison delivers a new novel in which the black male body is the central subject. Twenty-five years after its publication, The Bluest Eye, Morrison's novel of race and gender, is widely acknowledged as one of the finest works of fiction written by a contemporary American novelist. The Bluest Eye revolves around an eight-year-old girl who craves the bluest eye makeup her neighbor, Toni Morrison, uses to paint her skin. With absolute conviction, Toni explains that "The bluest eye is the blackest eye". Intended to be a novel that will change the very way people think about race, sex and beauty in the world, The Bluest Eye illuminates the often shadowy realm of the inner mind. Morrison was born in 1931 in

Lorain, Ohio. She grew up in the Ohio countryside, in her father's house, without much emotional or economic support. Toni studied psychology at Fisk University in Nashville and was inspired to pursue writing as a profession after reading The Autobiography of

Malcolm X. Toni
eventually became a writer, and is the author of Beloved, Song of Solomon, Jazz, and Paradise. *Five Things
You Didn't Know About
The Bluest Eye* 1.
Morrison named the book after the fact that,
