Assessment of blood pressure in the cuffless forearm during static handgrip in humans. This study was designed to determine the feasibility of the cuffless approach to measure blood pressure (BP) during static handgrip in humans. The cuffless forearm technique was investigated in five young adult males with a mean (+/-SE) age of 22.2 +/- 0.4 years. BP was taken before and at 0, 30, 60, 90, 120, and 180 seconds during 60% maximal voluntary handgrip and submaximal handgrip for 15, 30, 45, and 60 seconds. The cuffless forearm approach was satisfactory; BP measurements were reproducible; and the data from this technique were comparable to those taken by the conventional method. Systolic and diastolic BP increased significantly with handgrip duration. During handgrip, mean arterial pressure increased significantly with handgrip duration but did not change significantly during submaximal handgrip. These data demonstrate that the cuffless technique for BP measurement during static handgrip is feasible and reproducible in humans and can be used to determine the temporal relationship of BP and handgrip duration in response to static handgrip. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a device for spraying materials such as cement. More specifically, the invention relates to a nozzle that uses a pressurized gas to propel material. 2. Description of the Prior Art Various devices for blowing or spraying materials are known in the prior art. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 2,627,536 to Filippacci discloses an apparatus for spraying a high pressure carrier liquid comprising a reservoir, a conduit for the carrier liquid and a hollow needle to deliver the carrier liquid under high pressure to a nozzle, which is used to discharge a spray of liquid. 3ef4e8ef8d
