More particularly, the present invention relates to a lithographic printing form suitable for printing on a substrate using a solvent ink, and a method of printing using the lithographic printing form. In general, lithographic printing employs the principle of forming various images on a printing material according to a variety of printing methods. Known as one of these printing methods is a method wherein an ink is coated on a printing plate as a lithographic printing form, which is supplied to and passes between a dampening unit and a press cylinder, and then, the dampening unit and the press cylinder are engaged with each other to form images in the printing form on the paper using the ink. Such lithographic printing has been widely carried out due to high printing quality and superior environmental protection. In particular, a large-sized lithographic printing form using an aluminum substrate has been widely used in the printing of large amounts of information, such as bills and posters. Since the lithographic printing form is used for printing large amounts of information, plate life is required to be long and the printing can ba244e880a
