Using the java.util.regex package, I am trying to implement a way to search a file for a specified string. I want to be able to call this method and have it search through the file and return the indices of the strings that it found. Is there a way to make the regex search process 'block' until the previous one is completed? (let's assume that the string is 'test') For example: I call my method like this: // example input file String[] lines = new String[] { "line 1", "line 2", "line 3" }; // example input file contents String input = "text test abc"; RegexRenderer renderer = new RegexRenderer(); int[] indices = renderer.search(input, new File(input), lines); Instead of the indices array containing an array of indices, I would like the array to contain the 'doubles' that were in line 2, and the next indices that are associated with line 3, and so on. This example doesn't work, but hopefully it illustrates what I want. Array indices[0] = 4; Array indices
