In an internal combustion engine, the cylinder head gasket provides a seal between the cylinder block and the cylinder head. Its purpose is to seal the flue gases. The seal between the cylinder block and the cylinder head is a very important part of the operation of the engine, since its reliability and durability depend on it. The lining can undergo various changes. The cylinder head gasket is made of compressed rubber and contains a metal core. The core and the metal edge, with which the gasket is inserted into the head, are glued together with a special adhesive, and this adhesive also contains a small amount of rubber.
