Thursday, August 27, 2013 The sale of the used health records of up to 3.5 million people is one of the most brazen cases of data re-purposing to date, but it also has the potential to change how data-sharing works on the internet, says a privacy expert. The sale, which has been announced, was part of the UK's exit from the European Union last week and was presented as an example of how the European Union Data Retention Directive meant data was only deleted once it was no longer needed. "We can't say at this stage whether this individual [who was involved in the sale] committed a crime, but what we can say is it's an unprecedented abuse of data and it raises huge questions about how companies should handle people's personal information," says Emma Carr, deputy director of Big Brother Watch, a group that campaigns against mass surveillance. "There are

Review: I have been using Bocconi Cube Taskbar for a couple of days and I must say I am really impressed with this amazing program. I can drag and drop widgets to the cube desktop at will and add them to any of the faces of the cube and have an easy-to-find desktop and the cube will rotate every time I move the mouse. This works even with RSS feeds and all applications I use on a daily basis have now been completely redesigned with the cube as the backdrop and you are able to quickly reach any of them by typing the first letters of their names into the cube. Super fast animations, customizations and
