A 2-year-old castrated male domestic shorthair cat was presented with history of reluctance to stand, hind-limb hyperflexibility, hyperalgesia, and pruritus. Physical examination revealed bilateral, symmetrical mammary masses, congested mucosa of the pinna and oral cavity, and enlargement of the thymus, but no other abnormalities were identified. Thoracic radiographs revealed a large, well-circumscribed soft-tissue mass that extended from the eighth intercostal space to the mediastinum, with no involvement of the lungs. The mass was surgically resected and submitted for histopathologic and immunohistochemical evaluation. The mass consisted of a hyperplastic mixed connective and soft-tissue stroma containing mature lymphocytes, plasma cells, and mast cells. Immunohistochemical staining revealed expression of cytokeratin, neuron-specific enolase, B-cell and T-cell markers, and CD3, which were consistent with proliferation of thymocytes. This is the first report of concurrent thymic hyperplasia and extramammary neoplasia in a cat, and, to our knowledge, the first description of a thymoma in a cat.Q: Calculating limit without using L'Hôpital's Rule I have the function $y=\dfrac{x}{x+1}$. What is $\lim_{x\to 0}\dfrac{x^2+1}{x(x+1)}$? At first, I tried some approaches, like take the derivative of both sides, but it was too messy. So, I found the direct way, by $\lim_{x\to 0}x+1=\lim_{x\to 0}x\cdot\lim_{x\to 0}\dfrac{1}{x}=1\cdot0=0$, which is the result. What can I say about $\lim_{x\to 0}\dfrac{x^2+1}{x(x+1)}$?
