a SVN commit fails from a Gerrit submission? I'm working with a team that has two servers -- one to serve the production code and one for testing. Both servers are hosted in VMs and have a Gerrit instance for code review. We use git for our version control and have pushed to the other developer's testing server every time there is a change to the production server. So far, we have been able to keep track of merge conflicts and other issues in our own branch. However, we wanted to bring in a remote SVN repository for binary files. We have committed these files from the production server and then pushed them to our testing server. However, we're now having trouble resolving merge conflicts when the dev team syncs. Is there some way to determine when these binary files were changed from our production server to the testing server? I'm hoping that is not backwards to what we did with git. A: It seems that you're trying to do two things at once; trying to pull a svn branch/repository to Gerrit and trying to do a direct git checkout in Gerrit. (Actually, you don't really mention the direct git checkout thingy, but I'm assuming you're trying to do it, since you need to do it before you can pull the svn stuff to Gerrit). According to the release docs for Gerrit 2.1, a git change needs 3e33713323
