High-intensity interval training (HIIT) is a popular and effective alternative to steady-state exercise and is associated with reduced risk of metabolic disease in adults. This study examined whether HIIT induces similar favorable effects in obese adolescents, who are at a higher risk of metabolic disease. Adolescents (n=51) with a mean (SD) body mass index (BMI) of 30.8 (6.6) kg/m(2) [range 19.7-42.8] completed a 12-week HIIT intervention (n=26) or a control group (n=25). Total and fat-free mass (FFM) and percent body fat (Fat%) were measured at baseline, 8 and 12 weeks, and during a ~15-km treadmill run at maximal aerobic capacity. Adolescents in the HIIT group increased total work in the intermittent run (increase of 3086.6, P=0.02), reduced Fat% (median change -0.80, P=0.03) and increased FFM (median change 1.39 kg; P=0.03). A HIIT-induced positive change in total work and a negative change in Fat% were independently predicted by increased FFM. Lean body mass and peak running speed were associated with the speed-related component of total work. In obese adolescents, HIIT-induced increases in work capacity are associated with an increase in FFM; and this effect is greater in those with greater body cell mass.Q: Redirect from action in MVC4 I want to redirect from my controller method without passing anything from the controller to the view.
