Lectures in medical genetics. Read online. Due to the fact that hereditary and congenital diseases account for more than half of all childhood pathologies, medical genetics is a branch of medicine that studies the patterns of human heredity and variability, as well as the essence and causes of hereditary diseases and methods for their diagnosis, prevention and treatment. According to the genetic code (G. P. Kosenko) a person is born with a certain hereditary set, or genotype, which is transmitted from parents to offspring. With the help of special tests it is possible to determine the nature and frequency of interaction of gametes, on which the type and probability of inheritance depends. For example, if the parents have different genotypes, out of several combinations (as a percentage), the offspring may have albinos, homozygotes for the recessive gene, and heterozygotes - carriers of the dominant genes. For example, if both parents are heterozygous, they have a 50% chance of having white puppies. If both parents are homozygous, they have a 50% chance of having white puppies. If one parent is heterozygous, they have a 50% chance of having white puppies. If one parent is homozygous, they have a 50% chance of having white puppies. If one parent is heterozygous, they will have half of their puppies white. If one parent is homozygous, they will have half the puppies white. Heterozygotes will have 50% white puppies and homozygotes will have 50% white puppies. Homozygotes cannot have white puppies. Heterozygotes will have half the puppies white. When born of white, heterozygous parents, a white puppy may be born. When born to white, homozygous parents, a white puppy can be born. If both parents are white, a white puppy may be born. If one parent is white and the other puppy is homozygous for color, a white puppy may be born. If one parent is white and the other is heterozygous for color, a white puppy may be born. If both parents are white, a white puppy may be born. If one parent is white and the other is homozygous for color, a white puppy may be born. If one parent is white and the other is heterozygous for color, a white puppy may be born.
