How to Create an Active Directory Join for DHCP Introduction Active Directory Domain Join refers to the process of locating and determining whether a Windows Server computer can join a domain. As a network administrator, you must register the Windows Server computer as a member of an Active Directory domain before it can join. Note The example below describes how to register a Windows Server computer as a member of a domain. However, the procedure for joining a domain to another computer is the same. The computer that is trying to join must either be a member of an Active Directory domain or have access to a computer joined to a domain. The example in this article explains how to register a Windows Server computer as a member of an Active Directory domain. This is the most common method of domain joining because computers can join either directly or through their local domain controller. The procedure also describes how to verify that the computer has been registered as a member of an Active Directory domain. To run the wizard, log on as an administrative user or perform the procedure below. Procedure Click Start, point to Administrative Tools, and then click Local Security Policy.
