I wonder, should I turn on gravity in every level, if I use assets from this package, or should I do only for one level? A: (I'm posting this as a community wiki) If you're having trouble, it may be a good idea to just load the asset package into one (or a few) levels at first and check to make sure that the effect works and does what you want. There are common gotchas, like not creating or destroying prefabs when you want to test, or setting up your cameras after creating your level. (But none of this is related to the gravity component you mention.) In general I'd say that having a level with gravity on is preferable, because you can judge if it's working and if not, just switch it off for that level. It also makes it easier to find what's wrong if something's going wrong. (Or if you just want to try something out before you commit a huge amount of time and effort.) Q: Wpf, Is it possible to add "Dynamic Bitmap" to my canvas control? What do you think, Is it possible to add the Background image from my program as the Content of a Canvas Control? For example, I want the thumbnail in my Library and when the thumbnail is clicked, it will show an Window which include 2 Labels in it, one from the Program and the other from the Library. A: You can set the Image property of the canvas control to a bitmap.

You have to use a BitmapSource property of the canvas and set that property to your BitmapImage when you add it to your canvas control.
