Q: Glassfish customization - Can I run non-pre-compiled code on Glassfish 3.1? Glassfish 3.1 preview is out and I am trying to learn it. I am using eclipse without any plugins to get the development environment ready. I am using Glassfish 3.1 preview as an existing application server, following the instructions on here. I did some work on the server itself and also on the web.xml file. Now I am trying to create a Java server (something like apache), that runs my own non-pre-compiled code. I did the following: Create a run.bat file in my projects root and execute it. it also sets the security context to asadmin (I want to change this, as the current context is admin/asadmin) project is deployed to my application server as a war file Everything works fine - exception-page-handling, database setting, everything works perfectly. The only problem is: I have to access the admin console through "asadmin" to start the server. Is there a way to access the admin console directly from my code? A: i had the same problem and here is my solution: I've created an application server inside eclipse. I copied the generated war file to this application server and deployed it. I've set the security context of this application server to "AS_ADMIN" Now i can access the Glassfish admin console via Eclipse if i use the correct security context.
