Columns In an age of consumption, we are all busy producing and consuming, often forgetting about our soul and our true character. Yet without soul and character, it will be difficult to survive in a changing world. At our best, we find time to meditate, and we feel a connection with the rest of the planet. The following quotes are about meditation and spirituality, but you can substitute these quotes for any other word. By finding soul and character within ourselves we are no longer mere consumers. Instead we are spiritual beings who can make real change. Until he learned to smile, Sokto was not the person anyone would recognize. That is, he didn't look like Sokto. Young Jonathan was abandoned in a world that had no use for him, and he came from a world that had no room for him. He was born on an Indian reservation in the 1950s, when his mother and father were teenagers, and while there is no record of his birth, he had no birth certificate. Their only son was a forlorn foundling, a child who drifted through their lives. He was such a forgettable child that his parents, in an effort to keep him out of trouble, did not call him by his name. They called him "Say-so," and "Sokto," a pronunciation that comes from the Cree Indian word for boy. When he was about five, the girl next door's children snatched him and his sister away. He was heartbroken when he discovered they had taken their shoes, but he consoled himself with the fact that they had left his favorite blanket. For years, he wore that blanket wherever he went. "When he was very young," says his sister, Angela Thorne, "he was very happy. He smiled a lot." STORY This story was co-written by Sally Engle Merry and Marc Smith. It won the Short Story Award at the 2014 Southern USA Regional Short Story Contest. Share this Article: A recent Quaker School post concluded with the question, "What does it mean to be modern?" The description of being modern, was to be a consumer. The spirit of drinking Coke meant doing more for yourself. Don't feel guilty if you buy yourself something. This is very disturbing to me. We must all remember that the purpose of Quakers is to live in God's
