Choosing a preview setting Before you start a new project, it's smart to preview what you're going to do. You don't want to spend a lot of time and spend your resources on a project that you're not even going to use. You can preview your image before you begin working on it from a variety of different Preview items within the Photoshop Options dialog box (see Figure 6-1). You can preview the image on your computer monitor, on another display device, or on your printer. In addition to previewing the image for display on the monitor or on a print, you can preview a full-size print for approval before you start. Image courtesy of iStockPhoto, Inc. Figure 6-1: Preview your images on the monitor or by using the printer preview option to confirm that the changes look the way you want them to.

Mohamed Salah has been voted as the BBC African Footballer of the Year for the third successive year, with Manchester City's Kevin De Bruyne winning the main prize. Salah finished the campaign with 33 goals, more than any other player in Europe's top five leagues, and also won the Golden Boot with 22 strikes - an early-season injury-time strike against Huddersfield Town was controversially disallowed for offside. The Egyptian also won the Liverpool captaincy, while Barcelona's Neymar was named Spanish player of the year. Liverpool's Sadio Mane and Lyon's Nabil Fekir won their categories and the BBC African Footballer of the Year trophy. De Bruyne was the runaway winner with 15 votes, followed by Valencia's David Alaba (13), Tottenham's Harry Kane (12) and Manchester United's Paul Pogba (11) in the running. Liverpool's Mohamed Salah, Valencia's Nabil Fekir and Paris St Germain's Kylian Mbappe were in the top three. Other surprise winners included Monaco's Tiemoue Bakayoko and Liverpool's Jon Flanagan (both one vote each), while Juventus' Blaise Matuidi, West Ham's Marko Arnautovic and Bournemouth's Harry Arter shared the award for goalkeeper of the year. In his BBC Sport blog, BBC African football expert Richard Waddock said: "This is a strong list and I was really pleased that it reflected the huge growth in the role of African players on the continent - one that has been developing for some time but is now beginning to emerge more and more. "The upward trajectory of a number of African clubs - Bordeaux, Porto, Monaco and Liverpool - has also contributed. "But the real change has come down to the players themselves, and the more consistent and inspiring performances in club and country competitions, compared to the Emirates/UCL/Copa del Rey football of the past, has led to this improvement. "The winners in each of the categories represent the best of their generation of players, and have shown how the future is looking bright for African football as we move to the growing Fifa Women's World Cup 2019. The players are well-deserving of their success." The winners are announced at the BBC's African Football Awards dinner in London on Friday. Where can you see the BBC's African Football Awards 2018?

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS5?

Judging from various comments I received at that time, the biggest problem with such a program is that while it might help some people, the heavy-breathing, gum-chewing syndrome never seems to be affected. But let's suppose for a moment that a man is actually damaged by heavy breathing. In that case, he has two choices: take the damage, or make other changes to improve his health. But if he is damaged, why is there some presumption that he would decide to do nothing? If the medical community is correct, and the damage is real, why is there not at least some treatment? I've been to the doctor's many times and he always gets a little bit of my breath (or more, if I'm not being careful) checked for stuff -- and I don't even think it gets done more than twice a year. Just once, for me, in the last 5 years. (I had a cold last week and was coughing -- but they didn't even check my breath there.) Of course, I have had things checked that turned out to be completely imaginary -- but usually there were other symptoms to back them up. The questions I have, though, are: 1) What has been proven to actually be harmful? 2) Has there ever been an adequate trial of some of the things that are thought to be harmful? 3) Has there ever been a trial where the benefits outweighed the harms? 4) Are there "doses" where the benefit is zero or less than zero? (Note: (4) would apply to cigarettes as well.) If you're one of those people who react to your own breath (or desire to do so), I would suggest you try to follow in the footsteps of those who must endure such a condition. That may be technically for purposes of suicide prevention, since you could end up in the emergency room. If you don't manage it successfully, you'll end up dead, if not of suicide, then of some other respiratory disease. If I had the choice of two evils (self-harm or death), I would hope that I could choose to live and avoid death. A possible preventive of suicides is to consider that the means of taking someone's life could be forgotten. I've seen several suicides
