The seven-story building, known as the Borroughs Building and located at 15 Washington Ave., is the last of the historic apartments to be redeveloped in downtown Albany. "We have a major influx of students from upstate New York, and we're trying to find ways to attract them into the public school system," said Hill. "That's why the district chose to purchase the building. They are wanting to develop more space." The 10,000 square feet at the top level of the building will be leased to the school district, and a tenant in the ground level will handle the grocery needs of the students. "It's not that
