This window shows your image in the preview area, and it also hosts all your settings and key tools, the Path bar and a sequence of tool bars across the top of the window. Newer interface elements add the word "Layers" to the left side of the window. Frequency distribution of base excision repair and mismatch repair gene polymorphisms in thyroid cancer: a case control study in east Iranian population. The aim of this study was to find an association between the frequency distribution of the common polymorphisms of base excision repair (BER) genes [XRCC1 [Arg194Trp], XRCC3 [Arg399Gln], XRCC2 [Arg188His], XPD [Asp312Asn] and ERCC2 [C28T], and Mismatch Repair (MMR) gene [MLH1 [G-1202A], MSH2 [A1479G], MSH6 [G1909A], PMS1 [A746G], PMS2 [T241G] and MLH3 [C111T]], and risk of developing thyroid cancer. A total of 100 cases of thyroid cancer and 240 healthy controls, from east Iranian population, were included in this study. Genomic DNA was extracted from lymphocytes and the polymorphic sites of XRCC1 Arg194Trp (rs3212986), XRCC2 Arg188His (rs1799782), XPD Asp312Asn (rs1799793), XRCC3 Arg399Gln (rs13181), and ERCC2 C28T (rs13181), were typed by using PCR-RFLP. We found that carriers of ERCC2 TT genotype had increased risk of thyroid cancer when compared to the CC genotype (OR=4.26, 95% CI=1.04-17.86). We also observed a significant result for TT genotype of XRCC3 Arg399Gln polymorphism (OR=3.00, 95% CI=1.04-8.63), compared to the GG genotype, and also a significant result for the combination of TT and GG genotypes, compared to the CC genotype (OR=4.78, 95% CI=1.32-17.33). The results suggest that genetic polymorphism of ERCC2 and XRCC3 gene in the BER pathway may be associated with increased risk of thyroid cancer.
